Moderna Strikes Back

For those who don't read my Facebook entries, Darlene and I got our second Moderna shots on March 18. March 19 seems to have been the most uncomfortable day for the both of us. Darlene nursed a low grade fever, and her arm hurt a lot. Mine arm hurt plenty too, but not as much. By March 20, Darlene's fever was gone and her arm had improved. I felt the dull pain in my arm subsided throughout the day till it was barely recognizable by bedtime. All considered, it wasn't all that bad. Full immunization comes in two weeks... That's April Fools Day, no fool'in.

Monsters from the ID, Part 5

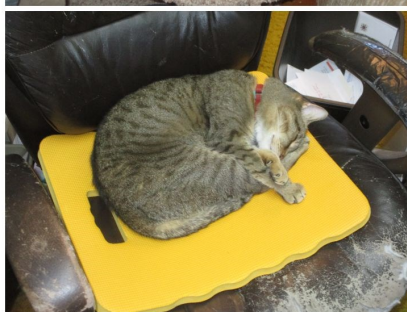

I'm sure getting the 2nd Moderna shot was a helpful morale booster for my sense of safety and well-being. That said, I've had close to 18 months of emotional upheaval to unwind. My advice to anyone contemplating a tangle with prostate cancer is not to take it on during a deadly pandemic, particularly if combined with four years of a baboon president who mafiosi managerial skills were taught to him by Roy Cohn.

As for me, my blood test PSA counts remain close to zero. That's very good news for those who have had a prostatectomy due to prostate cancer. Looking forward to when we can all start feeling like the planet really is brightening up.
